Abstract

The concerns of various stakeholders, like investors and regulators, following the 2008 financial crisis still linger on. Unless these are adequately addressed and promulgated to the public at large, the implications for continuing sluggish consumption, savings and investments, economic growth, etc are dire. What are the challenges to wealth management today? How to we ensure that nobody will lose money in the future? What are the lessons to be learnt in respect of investment portfolio construction and strategies to time and liquidate investments?
